Frequent Fights Mar Duke's Dance In Louisville, Ky.

PATROL WAGONS MAKE 15 TRIPS BEFORE DISTURBANCE IS QUELLED

Louisville, Ky., August 22— Duke Ellington and his orchestra appeared at the Armory Wednesday night under the auspices of a group of young colored men. A great crowd paid the high priced admission. And out of that crowd about 100 rowdies—although "dressed up" and looking like somebody—proceeded to start a rough house and disgrace the affair and also put the entire race in an embarrassing position.

Fights were so frequent that the patrol wagon made fifteen trips to the place and a riot call was put in with over 40 policemen on the scene. Bottles were thrown, knives were drawn and used, innocent persons were endangered. In fact a number of persons not engaged in the various disturbances were carried to Central Drug Co., for first aid, suffering from cuts and bottle wounds.

It was all the most disgraceful affair of supposed decent people to occur in this city, and nobody would have thought a riot was going on with police officers running here and there and patrons leaving trip after trip. At one time two patrol wagons were at the Armory door at the same time. It was a disgrace. Duke Ellington nor the management can be blamed for it. The Leader fought a noble man bringing colored orchestras here and growing rich off of Negroes. His last effort was a failure because of the Leader fight. This paved the way for Negro promoters who gave the affair Wednesday night. It is a peculiar thing that under the white man, who had even bigger crowds, there never was any trouble. But as soon as Negro promoters gave a dance at the Armory certain Negroes ran amuck.

Such affairs tempt the Leader to fight even Negro dances given by Negroes. The Leader cannot stand idly by and see a few Negroes disgrace the entire race by such affairs as occurred at the Duke Ellington dance. As sad as it is the fact remains the race is not judged by its 75 percent decent, respectable people, nor by its business and professional men, but by such rowdies as disgraced this affair.

It is doubtful if Duke Ellington will ever appear here again, as he was so frightened he could not wave his baton at his orchestra. The Duke is not used to such scenes.

Paige Hurls Bearded 9 To A 2-1 Victory

Denver, Colo., August 22—(ANP)—Satchel Paige, angular Pittsburgh Crawford hurler, loaned to the House of Kansas baseball nine for the Denver Post tournament pitched the white club to a 2 to 1 victory over the Kansas City Monarchs here Friday night at Merchants park before 11,120, and won the championship with the $5,000 cash in prize money, for his club.

Paige shaded Chet Brewer of the Monarchs in a baseball battle seldom witnessed nowadays. An error deprived Paige of a shutout and ended his string of scoreless innings at 23. But when he had won, Paige's records showed he had scored his third victory in five days, a record for the tournament, and had fanned 12 batters to increase his total to 44 in 28 innings.

He allowed eight hits while the House of David club was touching seven off Brewer. Paige didn't walk a man but Brewer gave four passes. Stearns, of Chicago, and Hankhead of Nashville, aided the Monarchs. Willie Foster, Chicago's famous left-hander, hurled the Monarchs to a 5 to 4 victory over Enid, Okla., another tournament game.

"ILL WIND" SWEEPS CHICAGO'S SOUTH SIDE

Chicago, Aug. 23—(ANP)—Don Redmon and his band moved into Chicagos nationally known theatre, the Regal, last week and all real rumors to the effect that a recent change in booking and management were destined to disrupt this superb musical organization. However, with King and King's New York office and Thomas Morton, Jr., personally accompanying Mr. Redmon, one could not appreciate a more healthy commercial aspect.

Packed houses, despite the many attractions and torrid weather which have vied in claiming the attention of Windy City folk, have greeted the famous composer of "Ill Wind," in his presentations at the Regal theatre. Noted for his blending of chords and passages into rhythmically sweet music that has made him a figure of international renown, Mr. Redman's popularity is still on the decided increase.

In speaking of the future of Negro bands, Mr. Redmon had the following to say:

"In the past, our musicians have been content to assuage the appetites of the Nordics, who had learned to expect 'hot' instead of 'sweet' music from Negro bands.

"It is a well known fact that white patrons have edged the nationality of their bands by the very definite characteristics of their music. It has been only in the past few years that full versatility has been desired or accorded the Negro musician by this class of patron.

"Today artists of the type of Vodery, Dawson, Smith Ellington and others are blazing the trail along all valleys and peaks. Personally, I am blending every possible effort in doing my part in support of this program as I am hopeful our work's stay here will last."

"At present my organization is composed of fifteen members every one of whom has had much advanced training—everyone of whom is still seeking higher levels and perfection in music."

Mr. Redmon's arrangement and rendition of "Ill Wind" is readily accepted as a case in point.

August 16, 1934

Dear Uncle Alfred:

Just a few days ago a problem came into my life and I thought that you could help me after reading your column every week.

I am a young woman, and for a number of years I have been in love with the only man for me. At the time I first met him he was married but finally they were separated and divorced. He promised me that I would be his next wife and I believed him for I felt that he loved me as I loved him. Of course with the economic depression over the country he felt it was better to try to make something before entering into the field of matrimony again and I consented for him to leave the city in which I lived to look for work.

Three years have passed and who should show up but this young man with another wife. Uncle Alfred I was truly broken hearted and didn't know what to do. He came to see me and persuaded me that he still loved me. I could not resist his charms. He still holds my heart and I just had to see him. He has promised to come back to my town to see me some week end and I am wondering if I should accept the little happiness that I now realize I shall ever get in seeing him and enjoying his company for a few hours when I know that as far as law is concerned he belongs to some other woman. What must I do? Shall I see him if he returns or try to find strength to resist him. Please Uncle Alfred tell me what to do.

One who will always love,
C. A.

C. A.:

You can't reasonably expect much real happiness from your illicit love. The odds were against you from the outset, due to the fact that your lover was already married when your romance began.

If he was untrue to his first wife, and as you intimate he is even now untrue to his second, how can you expect him to be true to you? Even love should be tempered with common sense, and you seem to be exhibiting very little in this instance.

My unconditional advice is to break off this foolish attachment at once. Seek to forget him by forming other friendships. To continue as you are now can only mean the perpetuation of your misery and unhappiness.

By all means refuse to even see him until you are sure you can resist the peculiar attraction he seems to hold for you.

You have thrown away your love. Try at least to retain your self-respect.

Prayingly,
Uncle Alfred.

Hutchinson, Kans.

Dear Uncle Alfred:

When quite a young man I married a girl in her teens. We were both too young to know what we were doing, and as a result our union did not prove very successful. A few years ago we were divorced, and I married again.

My second wife died over a year ago and since that time my former wife, who has remained unmarried, and I have been frequently thrown together. As a result of this association we have developed a new friendship, and find that now since we are both more matured we have much in common. While I have not mentioned it to her, I have reason to believe that she is not averse to again becoming my wife.

I am sure now that I really love her, and I am equally sure that she loves me, and will make me a good wife.

I am asking your advice in the matter. Would you advise me to again try a marriage that has once proven a failure.

Anxiously awaiting a reply, I am,
Sincerely yours,
A. C. K.

• • •

A. C. K.:

I can see no reason why you should not remarry your former wife under the circumstances. If you are both old enough to know your own minds, and are convinced that you really love, and which is even more important, understand each other, there is no other logical course for you to pursue.

There will in all probability be much unfavorable content, and many dire predictions from your friends and acquaintances; but do not let that deter you if you are sure you are following the right course. After all it is you two who are most vitally concerned, and the opinions of others is of little or no importance.

Yours truly,
Uncle Alfred.
