Many players intentionally include in deceptive bidding. There is nothing wrong with this style of play if the practitioner can point to more successes than failures in the practice of the art.

The trouble with fancy bids is that all too often partner becomes the victim of deception, instead of the opportunist at whom it is aimed. All the same, occasions do arise when a well-calculated deceptive move is so perfectly timed that there is only a small chance of partner's getting hooked, but a good chance

West had too good a hand to bid less than four spades, and this came around to Mrs. Kemp, who now mentioned hearts for the first time. West doubled, and that was that.

West led the A-K-Q of clubs and Mrs. Kemp wound up down one — 100 points.

Ever if West had led a diamond and gotten a ruff, Mrs. Kemp would still have gone down only 200 — a cheap save, considering that East-West could have scored 400 points by bidding a game, or 500 points by bidding a slam.
